
What can you see at the Pietra Corva Botanical Garden?

Already from the entrance path, you can see the rhododendrons; continuing, you can admire other beautiful flowers such as crocuses, snowdrops, bellflowers, anemones, buttercups.

The stretch of woodland is rich in beech, maples, hornbeam, chestnut, pear, cherry, hazelnut, hawthorn, larches, pine trees.

In the area of the two ponds there is a riot of white and yellow water lilies, accompanied by water clover, reed buttercups, ferns, irises and marsh orchids. Two small oases of peace where nature reigns supreme: in addition to the plants that embellish the landscape, various species of amphibians live there.

Another section is dedicated to the vegetation of the Maritime Alps, the Dolomites, the Gran Sasso massif and the Apuan Alps.

Not far from a small stream, you can admire the marsh violet and even an American carnivorous plant, while in other parts of the garden there are plants from the Pyrenees, the Andes and North America.

Images taken from VisitPavia

A precious garden with an international scope. A mountain corner that contains plants from all over the world and is right here, in the mountains of our beloved Oltrepò.

It welcomes tourists every Saturday, Sunday and public holidays from 10.00 to 18.00 .

For the year 2024, it is open until Sunday 29 September . Every first Sunday of the month, admission is free for everyone, on other days, it is free for those up to 18 years old and from 65 years old, while for all other visitors, the ticket costs €3.

Inside there is also a refreshment point, the Bar Ristorante del Giardino Alpino di Pietra Corva . It has everything!
